Abstract

Anne Long's husband, Ralph Long, worked for a telephone company and his work resulted in the family moving around a little bit during the 50s. Her family moved to Norfolk for one year and she remarks about the differences between the city and Louisa and how its differences affected her two children, who were born in the early 50s. Mrs. Long discusses her job in an office and how she had to stop working there after becoming pregnant with her first child. She discusses purchasing a home, raising children, and local businesses and services.
